Henryk Cymerman was born in Poland, moved with his family to Brazil in his early adolescence years, and finally his family immigrated to New York in his mid teens. From the age of 17, he was sculpting images out of stone. After attending High School in Brooklyn New York he then moved to Jerusalem Israel. In Jerusalem Cymerman attended Bezalel Academy of Art and Design, where he continued the study of art.

Graduating with recognitions as an outstanding student, Cymerman participated in exhibits that were influenced by the Conceptual Art of the seventies. It was the documentation of his Conceptual Art that brought Cymerman into photography and video. This work in film and video made him decide to study film. After serving in the Israeli army, he went on to earn his master in film from New York University's Tisch School of the Arts.
